

Call for Papers

The Workshop „Nuts & Bolts of Educational Research Projects“ as part of the DELFI 2021 conference is open for submissions in the field of technological decision-making processes in TEL research. The contributions should focus on one of the workshop's two major aspects: First, it provides a chance to showcase the underlying technology stack or the implemented toolchain of a research process, either in a project or as part of the Ph.D. effort. Second, it will offer a forum to discuss tools and processes currently at the verge of important technological decisions with fellow researchers.

The first aspect is intended as a retrospective on research processes in a mature state and should be submitted as long paper. Those papers document the implementation and decision-making process and helps junior researchers in the discovery and planning phase of their own research. The short paper format should present current research efforts from a technological perspective. Those contributions serve as a foundation for discussions and exchange of experiences and shall help to reflect decisions processes early on. Early concepts and work in progress submissions are explicitly welcomed.

To give credit to the technical nature of this workshop, it is possible to submit supplementary materials along with any contribution in both tracks. The discussions during the workshop should base on the most recent state possible, thus the supplement materials can be submitted until two weeks prior of the workshop and will be made available to registered participants at latest 72h before the workshop begins. This material can include, but is not limited to, illustrations like decision trees and structure charts, posters, videos or code snippets. The supplementary materials are not counted into the page limit of the contributions.

Accepted contributions will be published without supplementary materials in the joint workshop proceedings of the DELFI conference.
